In computing, batch processing refers to a computer working through a queue or batch of separate jobs (programs) without manual intervention (non-interactive). Depending on the situation, each job may have an associated metadata such as client, department or user - and some indication of the priority and resources required. An operating system in this case will often use this last information ...

Characteristics. Typically scripting languages are intended to be very fast to learn and write in, either as short source code files or interactively in a readâ€“evalâ€“print loop (REPL, language shell). This generally implies relatively simple syntax and semantics; typically a "script" (code written in the scripting language) is executed from start to finish, as a "script", with no explicit ...
